

Qea's Faith (Invisible Faith)

Turning 15 this year, Qea sought out to find the idea of god. At least, her mother told her a lot about her beliefs. The problem though is the towns people thought Qea's mother was bat shit crazy and never believed her vivid stories of a faith that existed 17 million years ago. Qea could care less, her mother was beautiful and knew small things that no one else acknowledged.

One night, while dreaming, Qea woke up. She turned on the light. Nothing was there. She closed her eyes. She dreamt. In her dream a bird told her that all her problems would dissolve or disappear if she lengthened her name by one letter. Which letter? She asked? The letter beginning with the sound of breath. "Oh!" She exclaimed. "Ha! I know which letter. I choose. H like Ham!" My mother's name is also Home.

When Qea woke up she found a book sitting on the table by her bed. She had no earthly idea what or who could have brought it to her bedside. She decided to read it. After a few minutes of not being that interested in the subject matter of the bizarre text, she flipped a few pages and lo and behold, there it was! Utopia, she thought, my name! Qhea. Although she had never seen an H placed there nor was it her idea to place it there; she decided in the end to keep her name the same.

Book Span: 601 BCE – 421 AD

Number of pages: 531

Origin: Waves crossing the Atlantic

Metallic Mass: True (False)

---

Twenty years later, Qea died suffering from the same pain as Alice. Too many characters in her brain. Eureka, Qhea.